1. (A) Introduction

- 1.1 CIVICUS is a global alliance of civil society organizations and activists dedicated to strengthening citizen action and civil society around the world. Founded in 1993, we proudly promote marginalised voices, especially from the Global South, and have members in more than 160 countries throughout the world.
- 1.2 The Bahrain Center for Human Rights (BCHR) is a non-profit, non-governmental organization, registered with the Bahraini Ministry of Labor and Social Services since July 2002. BCHR documents and reports on human rights violations in Bahrain and uses this documentation for advocacy to ensure that policies are in accordance with the Universal Declaration of Human Rights.
- 1.3 The Gulf Centre for Human Rights (GCHR) is an independent, non-profit and non-governmental organization that works to provide support and protection to human rights defenders in the Gulf region by promoting freedom of expression, association and peaceful assembly.
- 1.4 In this document, CIVICUS, BCHR and GCHR examine the Government of Bahrain's compliance with its international human rights obligations to create and maintain a safe and enabling environment for civil society. Specifically, we analyse Bahrain's fulfilment of the rights to freedom of association, assembly, and expression and unwarranted restrictions on human rights defenders (HRDs) since its previous UPR examination in May 2012. To this end, we assess Bahrain's implementation of recommendations received during the 2nd UPR cycle relating to these issues and provide a number of specific, action-oriented follow-up recommendations to the Government of Bahrain.
- 1.5 During the 2nd UPR cycle, Bahrain received 40 recommendations relating to civic space. Of these recommendations, Bahrain accepted 37 and noted 3. An evaluation of a range of legal sources and human rights documentation addressed in subsequent sections of this submission demonstrate that the Government of Bahrain has only partially implemented 1 recommendation and has not implemented the remaining 39 recommendations. The failure of the government to take proactive steps to implement these recommendations is symptomatic of the Bahraini Government's unwillingness to address unwarranted restrictions on the above mentioned rights/ civic space since its last UPR examination.
- 1.6 In particular, CIVICUS remains deeply concerned by the severe and continued restrictions on freedom of expression including the routine judicial persecution and harassment of individuals and groups for taking part in legitimate forms of dissent both online and offline.

1.7 CIVICUS is further alarmed by the targeting of human rights defenders, journalists, religious leaders, peaceful protesters and civil society representatives through reprisals, travel bans, prison sentences, torture and other unjustified limitations.

- In Section B, CIVICUS, BCHR and GCHR examine Bahrain’s implementation of UPR recommendations and compliance with international human rights standards concerning freedom of association.
- In Section C, CIVICUS, BCHR and GCHR examine Bahrain’s implementation of UPR recommendations and compliance with international human rights standards related to the protection of human rights defenders, civil society activists and journalists.
- In Section D, CIVICUS, BCHR and GCHR examine Bahrain’s implementation of UPR recommendations and compliance with international human rights standards concerning freedom of expression, independence of the media and access to information.
- In Section E, CIVICUS, BCHR and GCHR examine Bahrain’s implementation of UPR recommendations and compliance with international human rights standards related to freedom of assembly.
- In Section F, CIVICUS, BCHR and GCHR make a number of recommendations to address the concerns listed.

2. (B) Freedom of association

2.1 During Bahrain’s examination under the 2nd UPR cycle, the government received 10 recommendations on freedom of association and creating an enabling environment for civil society organizations (CSOs). Among other recommendations, the government committed to “abandon any restriction or obstacle to the work of persons and institutions engaged in the protection and promotion of human rights”¹ and to “align the national legislation on freedom of expression, association and assembly with country’s international human rights obligations”.² Of the recommendations received, all ten were accepted. However, as evidenced below, the government has failed to take adequate measures to realize many of these recommendations. Nine of the ten recommendations on freedom of association that the Bahraini Government accepted have not been implemented and one has partially been implemented.

2.2 Article 27 of the Bahraini Constitution guarantees freedom of association.³ Moreover, article 22 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights (ICCPR), to which Bahrain is a state party, also guarantees freedom of association. Despite these commitments, the government forbids CSOs to work on political issues, forcibly and unwarrantedly dissolves independent CSOs and limits the unionisation of certain sectors.

2.3 The 1989 Law of Associations is the primary law governing the activities and operations of civil society organizations in Bahrain. The law, implementation of which is overseen by the Ministry of Labour and Social Affairs, maintains a number of illegitimate restrictions which are regularly invoked to sanction or suppress independent CSOs. These include:

- Article 18, which forbids CSOs from working on political issues without specifically defining the parameters of what constitutes “political”.
- Article 50, which allows the Ministry of Labour and Social Affairs to dissolve a CSO if they deem the organization is unable to achieve the objectives it was established to undertake or if it violates the Law of Associations, public order or norms. The law fails to provide a definition of “norms”.
- Article 9 requires all CSOs, including informal groups, to compulsorily register with the authorities. If the Ministry does not respond within 60 days, the registration request is deemed denied.
- Article 89 imposes a fine of BHD1000 (US$2640) and/or a year of imprisonment for establishing and operating an unregistered organization or publishing or broadcasting on behalf of an unlicensed organization.⁴
- Once an organization is registered, it is subject to official investigations by authorities on a regular basis. According to Article 20, CSOs are not allowed to receive funds from foreign sources or join another organization that is based outside Bahrain without prior permission from “specialized administrative authority” under the auspices of the Ministry of Social Development.⁵

2.4 According to Article 10 of Law 33/2002 on Workers and Trade Unions, workers of any particular establishment or sector have the right to join a trade union. However, the law maintains overly vague provisions, which prevents public sector workers from unionising in practice.⁶ Under the law, Post Office Workers, Water and Electricity Workers, Public Works Workers, Healthcare Workers, Social Insurance Workers and Retirement Fund Workers have all repeatedly been denied registration to unionise.⁷ These rigid restrictions and the denial of registrations for a number of vital sectors have forced many working groups to form non-official networks, including among writers, journalists, medical doctors and nurses.⁸

- 2.5 On 22 May 2016, the Shura Council, the Upper House of the Parliament, passed an amendment to article 5 of the Political Societies Law (2005), preventing any religious figure who delivers a sermon from joining political societies or from participating in political activities. The amendment determines that “political societies’ heads and leaders shouldn’t be religious preachers, even if they occupy the position in the societies’ without being paid.”⁹
- 2.6 In sharp contrast to the government’s targeted persecution of independent CSOs, Government-Organized NGOs (GONGOs), do not face the same level of restrictions and are typically allowed to operate unencumbered.¹⁰ GONGOs not only assume vital resources, legitimize the government’s claims of civic engagement and accountability but have also participated in and led defamation campaigns against independent CSOs and human rights defender (HRDs).
- 2.7 Since Bahrain’s last UPR examination, the government has intensified efforts to impede the functioning and work of CSOs through monitoring and dissolution of CSOs deemed critical of the government or its policy. A number of independent CSOs have been subjected to targeted persecution or forced closure. Since 2000, 30 CSOs have been dissolved of which 11 were dissolved in 2016 alone¹¹. According to BCHR the national dialogue with civil society was suspended in 2014, following the arrest of one of the representatives participating in the dialogue. On 14 June 2016, the Ministry of Social Development closed down two non-profit religious societies: Al-Risala Islamic Society and the Islamic Enlightenment Society (Al-Taweya).¹² On 17 July 2016, The High Civil Court ordered the largest opposition group, Al-Wefaq Islamic Political Society, dissolved, confiscated the society’s assets, closed the headquarters and blocked its website.¹³ The decision was upheld in the Appeals Court on 22 September 2016¹⁴. The authorities also dissolved the Bahrain Teacher's Society and took over the Bahrain Medical Society by replacing its board members with pro-government operatives in April 2011.¹⁵ Similarly, the Bahrain Nursing Society was dissolved and its headquarter was subsumed after the Society held a solidarity event for a member who was arrested for treating an injured protester in March 2010.¹⁶ The Bahrain Lawyers Society's legally elected board was also declared illegitimate by ministerial decision and replaced in December 2011.¹⁷ Furthermore, the administrative body of the Authors and Writers Family Society was pressured to resign in July 2011.

- 2.8 While the authorities continue to stymie unionization in the country, the government has taken some modest steps to ease draconian persecution of state employees and students for maintaining dissident views. Specially, the government has partially implemented a recommendation put forward by the Government of Canada during Bahrain's 2nd UPR cycle to "Reinstate all employees and students dismissed following the events of February and March 2011 whose political activities were consistent with the right to freedom of peaceful assembly and of association (...)". However, while several people were re-instated and given new contracts, there are still approximately 50 people that have not been re-instated¹⁸.
- 2.9 The UN Special Rapporteur on the Rights to Freedom of Peaceful Assembly and of Association has requested an official visit Bahrain but has not received an answer.

3. (C) Harassment, intimidation and attacks against human rights defenders, journalists and civil society representatives

- 3.1 During Bahrain's previous UPR, five recommendations were made on the protection of HRDs, journalists and civil society representatives. Of these recommendations, the government accepted four recommendations and noted one. Among others, the government committed to ensuring "that human rights defenders must be protected and allowed to conduct their work without hindrance, intimidation or harassment" and to “cease all intimidation or repression against human rights defenders, journalists and Non-Governmental Organizations”. However, despite these commitments, none of the five recommendations have been implemented.

- 3.2 Article 12 of the UN Declaration on HRDs mandates states to take necessary measures to ensure protection of HRDs. The ICCPR further guarantees freedom of expression, association and peaceful assembly. However, despite of these protections, HRDs in Bahrain continue to face repression, politically motivated charges and arbitrary arrest and detention.
- 3.3 Of critical concern is the Government’s frequent misuse of the overbroad and widely criticised Protecting Society From Terrorism Acts law and Article 214 of Penal Code, which criminalises a number of legitimate activities including “insulting authorities or “insulting the King”¹⁹. According to BCHR, more than 3,000 individuals remain detained in Bahrain for exercising their fundamental civic and public freedoms. The vast majority of these HRDs have also been charged under articles 133, 215 and 216 of the Penal Code, which precludes spreading false rumours in wartime, offending national institutions and offending a foreign country or institution²⁰. HRDs are routinely summoned for interrogation by the security agencies and trials are frequently based on confessions coerced under torture. HRDs are often denied a lawyer or contact with their family.
- 3.4 The number of HRDs, civil society representatives and members of their family who have had travel bans imposed on them has increased precipitously since Bahrain’s previous UPR. In June 2016 and during the 32nd session of the UN Human Rights Council, 23²¹ Bahraini HRDs and family members of victims of extrajudicial killings were banned from traveling to Geneva.²² On 29 August 2016, advocacy coordinator at BCHR, Nedal Al-Salman was banned from travelling, as she was on her way to Geneva to partake in a UN roundtable²³. According to GCHR, international CSOs and HRDs are normally not let into Bahrain and Joe Stork from Human Rights Watch is persona non grata.
- 3.5 On 13 June 2016, the opening day of the UN HRC's 32nd Session, security forces arrested HRD Nabeel Rajab, President of the BCHR, founding Director of the GCHR and Deputy Secretary General of the International Federation for Human Rights

(FIDH).²⁴ On 14 June 2016, Nabeel Rajab was charged with “publishing and broadcasting false news that undermines the prestige of the state,” related to statements in TV interviews²⁵. In a separate case, he risks 15 years in prison for charges related to tweets and retweets about the war in Yemen and for insulting a statutory body on social media. He has been forced to endure harsh conditions tantamount to ill-treatment which have adversely impacted his health.²⁶ On 4 September 2016, a letter written by Nabeel Rajab in his prison cell was published in New York Times and immediately, the Bahraini authorities responded by bringing an additional charge of “undermining the prestige of the state” against him.²⁷ In 2011 and 2012, Nabeel Rajab was detained on several occasions for expressing democratic dissent. On 11 December 2012 he was sentenced to two years in prison on charges of organizing unauthorized protests.²⁸

- 3.6 Former Director and founder of BCHR and GCHR, Abdulhadi Al-Khawaja, has been serving a life sentence in prison since 2011 due to his human rights work in Bahrain and the Gulf region.²⁹ He was one of 13 political and human rights leaders that received prison sentences ranging from 5 years to life in prison. They remain imprisoned with no further appeals³⁰ on alleged charges of “breaching the Constitution and participating in a plot to overthrow the regime and having intelligence contact with foreign entities”³¹. Since Al-Khawaja’s arrest and detention, he has been subjected to severe torture, and as a result suffers from a number of critical medical conditions.
- 3.7 Woman human rights defender Zainab Al-Khawaja has been detained eleven times since 2011 on different charges for her activism and on 5 June 2016 she was forced to leave Bahrain with her family as new charges with lengthy sentences would be imposed against her.³² Co-director of the Gulf Centre for Human Rights, Maryam Al-Khawaja, was sentenced in absentia to one-year imprisonment on trumped up charges of assaulting police officers detaining her at Bahrain International Airport when she attempted to visit her father Abdulhadi Al-Khawaja in prison.³³

- 3.8 Dr Abduljalil Al-Singace has been serving a life sentence since 2011.³⁴ The accusations brought against him, including destabilizing the government, are based on his blogging activity, which include commenting on the government's restrictions on civil liberties and discrimination of the Shiite majority population in Bahrain. In prison, Abduljalil Al-Singace has been subjected to severe physical and psychological torture.³⁵
- 3.9 Naji Fateel, a prominent HRD and member of Bahrain Youth Human Rights Society, was tried under the Protecting Society From Terrorism Acts in September 2013, together with 49 other HRDs and political activists.³⁶ Naji Fateel has been reported to be subjected to severe torture during his interrogation in the notorious Criminal Investigations Directorate (CID) and later in Jaw prison.³⁷ He was sentenced to 15 years in prison.³⁸
- 3.10 Press freedom in Bahrain remains highly restricted and there are reports of persecution of several members of the media. Journalists Hussam Suroor, Ahmed Zainaldeen and Mustafa Rabea were detained incommunicado for five days following their arrest on 4 September 2014. Suroor was sentenced to over 20 years in multiple cases and Zainaldeen and Rabea to 10 years in prison for illegal assembly and charges related to an explosion in Duraz. Since 2012, there have been at least 88 cases of denial of entry for foreign journalists and members of international human rights group.³⁹ In February 2016, authorities arrested four US journalists around the fifth anniversary of the 2011 protests in Bahrain although they were later released.⁴⁰

- 3.11 In November 2015, award-winning photographer, Sayed Ahmed Al-Mousawi was sentenced to 10 years imprisonment and had his citizenship revoked after being accused of joining a terrorist cell after covering a protest in Sitra, a Bahraini island south of Manama, providing SIM cards to “terrorist” demonstrators and taking photos of anti-government protests.⁴¹ Award-winning photojournalist Ahmed Humaidan has also been serving a 10-year prison sentence since December 2012 for documenting pro-democracy demonstrations in Sitra. Photographer, Jaffar Marhoon, was arrested on 26 December 2013 and convicted on several politically motivated charges to a total of 27 years and four months in prison.⁴²
- 3.12 Several opposition political party members convicted and sentenced for merely exercising their right to freedom of expression remain in custody. Sheikh Ali Salman, General Secretary of Al-Wefaq Society, delivered a speech on 26 December 2014, calling for political reform. In June 2015, he was sentenced to four years in prison for “publicly inciting hatred, disturbing public peace, inciting civil disobedience of the law, and insulting public institutions”⁴³ which was then increased to nine years on appeal.

4. (D) Freedom of expression, independence of the media and access to information

- 4.1 Under the 2nd UPR cycle, the government of Bahrain received 23 recommendations on freedom of expression and access to information. 22 of these recommendations were accepted and one was noted. Among other recommendations, the government pledged to “Adopt as soon as possible a legislative framework on freedom of expression, including access to internet, to decriminalize defamation and slander as crimes,” and “Release persons imprisoned as required by freedom of expression and repeal all legislation that criminalizes the exercise of this right”. However, as examined below, the government did not take the necessary measures to implement any of these 22 recommendations.
- 4.2 Article 19 of the ICCPR guarantees freedom of expression and opinion. Article 23 of the Constitution of Bahrain also guarantees freedom of expression. However, the state of freedom of expression has seen a marked deterioration in law and practice since Bahrain’s last UPR.

- 4.3 Bahrain's Penal Code continues to be used to limit freedom of expression. Article 92 (c) criminalizes "written materials, drawing, pictures, signs, films and other means of expression if they are displayed at any of the aforesaid places." This legislation allows for the imprisonment and/or fine of any person who publishes "untrue" reports or "falsified" documents to undermine public peace, cause damage to the country's supreme interest, or causes offence to the country's reputation. The Penal Code also imposes sanctions on individuals who insult or criticize the government, neighboring countries, or religious figures.⁴⁴
- 4.4 Bahrain's Protecting Society From Terrorism Acts law is also commonly used to stifle freedom of expression under vague and overbroad definitions of the Terrorism. Article 12 of the law prescribes lengthy prison sentences and steep fines against "whoever promotes or approves, in any way, any act of crime committed for a terrorist purpose."
- 4.5 To further restrict freedom of expression, on 18 November 2013, the Shura Council approved parliamentary amendments to article 214 of the Penal Code extending the sentence for "insulting the King" to up to seven years.⁴⁵ In February 2014, King Hamad bin Isa Al-Khalifa ratified Law 1/2014, which was an amendment passed by the Parliament of article 214 of Penal Code. Consequently, article 214 states that "a punishment of imprisonment for a period of no less than one year and no more than seven years and a fine of no less than BHD1,000 (US$2,650) and no more than BHD 10,000 (US$26,500) will be inflicted upon any person who offends in public the Monarch of the Kingdom of Bahrain, the flag or the national emblem."⁴⁶ Worryingly, the law does not specify what constitutes an offence and therefore allows for the criminalization of any form of criticism of the King.
- 4.6 In December 2014, King Hamad enacted the Anti-Cybercrimes Law, which criminalizes the use of encryption for "criminal purposes"⁴⁷ and Article 168 of the Penal Code imposes sentences for contravention of the law up to two years in prison and or a fine of BHD200 (US$530).⁴⁸ Hayat Abdel Majid, the head of the Ministry of Interior's Department for Economic and Electronic Security, announced⁴⁹ that an administrator of a WhatsApp group (a mobile phone communication service that

- 4.7 On 16 July 2016, the Information Affairs Minister, Mohammed Al-Rumaihi, issued Decree 68/2016 regulating newspapers' use of electronic media, which was even more restrictive than the 2002 Press Law.⁵¹ Provisions include that licensed newspapers may only disseminate electronic media after receiving a temporary permit from Bahrain's mass media directorate, banning live streaming and limiting audio-visual clips to only 120 seconds.⁵²
- 4.8 In February 2015, the authorities suspended the Al-Arab television channel after only one day on air following an interview aired with an aide to a Bahraini opposition leader.⁵³ On 6 August 2015, Bahraini authorities suspended the only semi-independent newspaper in Bahrain, Al-Wasat, from broadcasting on Youtube, claiming that their license does not allow them to broadcast video material⁵⁴.
- 4.9 Since 2012, Bahrain's courts have collectively sentenced at least 40 Internet users to imprisonment for exercising their right to freedom of expression on the internet and social media.⁵⁵ As of June 2016, at least 14 Internet users remain in prison, some of whom are serving prison sentences of up to 10 years. Several have experienced ill-treatment and torture in prison and their charges range from insulting the King or inciting hatred to terrorism actions. Other Internet users have had their citizenship revoked and/or have been forced into exile.⁵⁶
- 4.10 According to Reporters Without Borders, the Ministry of Information has blocked or shut down several websites in Bahrain, including human rights websites, blogs, online forums, and individual pages from social media networks.⁵⁷ The BCHR website and the website of the Arab Network for Human Rights Information (ANHRI), an NGO working to ensure freedom of expression through monitoring, documenting and providing legal support in the Arab world, remain blocked in Bahrain since 2006. Bahrain Online, a prominent online forum, has been blocked since its launch in 1998. In August 2013, the Communications Minister ordered

4.11 It should be noted that the recommendation: “That further progress be made toward concrete and visible reform, including through implementation of the follow-up committee’s report, in a way which guarantees transparency and freedom of speech” was not implemented by the Government of Bahrain. While several state-sponsored human rights monitoring bodies, including an Ombudsman, a Special Investigation Unit (SIU) and a National Human Rights Institution (NHRI), have been established, these bodies lack the basic principles of independence and have failed to effectively and impartially investigate human rights violations documented by a range of intergovernmental and civil society stakeholders.⁵⁹ In a statement to the UN Human Rights Council on 16 June 2016, Americans for Democracy and Human Rights in Bahrain (ADHRB) and four other CSOs underlined that, the Ombudsman is not independent from the government but relies on the Ministry of Interior for the position and financial security.⁶⁰ According to ADHRB, he also lacks ability to investigate the use of its case work in the best interest of victims, to obtain convictions for abuses or criticize the functioning of the Ministry of Interior⁶¹ In their statement on 16 June, the CSOs also underlined that SIU is part of the Public Prosecutor’s Office and, therefore, “unable to independently and impartially investigate claims of abuse and torture by security forces”. Additionally, the NHRI is not independent nor has adequate investigation power. Government representatives control its board, while it has ignored requests from NGOs and has showed a “structural bias towards the government and a general apathy toward the wider challenges facing human rights in Bahrain.”⁶²

5. (E) Freedom of peaceful assembly

5.1 During Bahrain’s 2nd UPR cycle, the government received 17 recommendations on freedom of peaceful assembly. Bahrain accepted all 17 of these recommendations. Among other recommendations, the government committed to “Revise the Public Gathering Law (32/2006), so that peaceful demonstrations can be held as established by the ICCPR” and committed to “A speedy conclusion to these cases (of human rights violations against peaceful protestors), such as the ongoing case of Abdulhadi Al-Khawaja.” However, as evidenced below, the government has not implemented these recommendations.

- 5.2 Article 21 of the ICCPR guarantees freedom of peaceful assembly. In addition, article 28 of Bahrain’s Constitution also guarantees freedom of assembly. However, in law and practice, freedom of peaceful assembly is severely stifled in Bahrain through a combination of excessive use of force by security officials and the imposition of unduly restrictive laws.
- 5.3 In 2006, the same year that Bahrain became a signatory to the ICCPR, the government passed Law 32/2006 on Public Meetings, Processions and Gatherings, significantly curtailing people’s right to peaceful assembly.⁶³ The law “imposes blanket restrictions on both time and location” of assemblies, and “requires both prior notification and authorization”. The Law 32/2006 restricts the timing of protests and gatherings, forbidding them before sunrise or after sunset. Since the outbreak of the pro-democracy protest movement in 2011, the authorities have increasingly invoked Law 32/2006 to limit the protests of opposition groups and human rights activists. In July 2013, the Bahraini Parliament imposed a blanket-ban on sit-ins and rallies in the capital Manama and other central locations.⁶⁴
- 5.4 Furthermore, Article 2 of the Public Meetings, Processions and Gatherings Law 32/2006 states that protests and gatherings are only allowed to be held or organized after notifying the Ministry of Interior three days in advance of the action. However, in practice, these notifications are tantamount to authorisation. In 2015 alone, the religious opposition group, Al-Wefaq Society stated that the Ministry of Interior rejected requests to hold more than 140 peaceful gatherings proposed by the opposition political parties. The law further endows the authorities with the power to unilaterally cancel demonstrations, modify the route of the protest or change its time and location.
- 5.5 Article 13 of the Public Meetings, Processions and Gatherings Law 32/2006 lists a number of criminal sanctions for violating the law, including up to six months imprisonment and/or a fine of not less than BHD100 (US$265) against whoever holds protests or gatherings without permission or holds them despite a ban order. Those who participate in banned protests – despite the authorities’ warning – will receive a sentence of up to four months in prison and/or not less than BHD50 fine.

- 5.6 Peaceful protests and gatherings, which are not officially approved by the Ministry of Interior, are routinely subject to violent suppression.⁶⁵ Security forces often use excessive force to disperse protesters, such as teargas and live ammunition, resulting in high numbers of injuries. At least five people have been killed in protests since 2012.
- 5.7 The BCHR documented that between 8 February 2016 and 31 May 2016, 659 protests were held across Bahrain, of which at least 83 were reportedly dispersed by security forces using excessive force. An estimated 157 peaceful protests were documented in the period 11 - 14 February 2016, marking the 5th anniversary of the 2011 pro-democracy protests, of which at least 33 protests were suppressed with excessive force resulting in numerous injuries⁶⁶.

6. (F) Recommendations to the Government of Bahrain

CIVICUS, BCHR and GCHR call on the Government of Bahrain to create and maintain, in law and in practice, an enabling environment for civil society, in accordance with the rights enshrined in the ICCPR, the UN Declaration on Human Rights Defenders and Human Rights Council resolutions 22/6, 27/5 and 27/31.

At a minimum, the following conditions should be guaranteed: freedom of association, freedom of expression, freedom of peaceful assembly, the right to operate free from unwarranted state interference, the right to communicate and cooperate, the right to seek and secure funding and the state's duty to protect. In light of this, the following specific recommendations are made:

6.1 Regarding freedom of association

- Take measures to foster a safe, respectful, enabling environment for civil society; including through removing legal and policy measures, which unwarrantedly limit the right to association.
- Remove all undue restrictions on the ability of civil society organizations to receive international and national funding in line with best practices articulated by the UN Special Rapporteur on the rights to freedom of peaceful assembly and association.

⁶⁶ NGOs Condemn Violence Against Protesters on Fifth Anniversary of Bahrain's Peaceful Uprising, Bahrain Center for Human Rights, 16 February 2016, <http://bahrainrights.org/en/node/7729>

- All CSOs, which have been arbitrarily and unduly sanctioned or deregistered, should be immediately reinstated.
- Refrain from acts leading to the closure or suspension of CSOs, and instead promote a meaningful political dialogue that allows and embraces diverging views, including those of HRDs, CSOs, journalists, political activists and others.
- Amend the 1989 Law of Associations to guarantee that undue restrictions on freedom of association are removed to bring their provisions into compliance with articles 21 and 22 of ICCPR.
- Amend Law 33/2002 of Workers and Trade Unions to guarantee that undue restrictions on freedom of association are removed to bring their provisions into compliance with articles 21 and 22 of ICCPR.
- Guarantee the effective and independent functioning of autonomous trade unions by removing the proscriptions on the formulation of independent labour unions and undue limitations on the right to strike for unions.

6.2 Regarding the protection of human rights defenders

- Civil society members, journalists and HRDs should be provided a safe and secure environment to carry out their work and those imprisoned must be unconditionally and immediately released. Conduct impartial, thorough and effective investigations into all cases of imprisonment, travel bans, torture, attacks, harassment, and intimidation against them and bring perpetrators of such offences to justice.
- Ensure that HRDs are able to carry out their legitimate activities without fear or undue hindrance, obstruction or legal and administrative persecution.
- Consolidate a process of repeal or amendment of laws and decrees, which unwarrantedly restrict the legitimate work of HRDs in line with the UN Declaration on Human Rights Defenders;
- Repeal the Protecting Society From Terrorism Acts law and articles 133, 215 and 216 of the Penal Code in accordance with the ICCPR and the UN Declaration on HRDs.
- Senior government officials must publicly condemn instances of persecution and intimidation of civil society activists and organizations.
- The Government should apply systematic legal provisions that promote and protect human rights and establish mechanisms that protect HRDs by adopting a specific law on the protection of HRDs in accordance with resolution 27.31 of the UNHRC.

6.3 Regarding freedom of expression, independence of the media and access to information

- Ensure freedom of expression and media freedom by making national legislation in line with international standards.
- Review the Penal Code, anti-terrorism laws, the Publication law, the Anti-Cybercrimes Law and regulations on media in order to ensure that local legislation is in line international human rights standards on freedom of expression.
- All media outlets unwarrantedly closed should be reinstated.
- Authorities must cease practice of confiscating and censoring print media and ensure that media can broadcast online without restrictions.
- Ensure that journalists, writers and photographers can work freely and without fear of retribution for expressing critical opinions or covering “sensitive” topics.
- Adopt a framework for the protection of journalists from persecution, intimidation and harassment.
- Guarantee unfettered access for all persons in Bahrain to domestic and foreign media information, both offline and online.
- Remove restrictions on access to national and international news websites, social media outlets and the websites of CSOs.
- Adopt a law on access to information in order to fully promote the exercise of the right to freedom of expression and freedom of opinion.

6.4 Regarding freedom of assembly

- Best practices on freedom of peaceful assembly should be adopted, as put forward by the UN Special Rapporteur on the rights to freedom of peaceful assembly and association in his annual report (2012), which calls for simple notification rather than explicit permission to assemble.
- Amend Law 32/2006 on Public Meetings, Processions and Gatherings in order to fully guarantee the right to freedom of peaceful assembly.
- All demonstrators, journalists and HRDs detained for exercising their right to freedom of peaceful assembly should be unconditionally and immediately released. Their cases should be reviewed to prevent further persecution.
- All instances of extra-judicial killings and excessive force committed by security forces while monitoring protests and demonstrations should be immediately and impartially investigated.

- Senior government officials should publically condemn the use of excessive and brutal force by security forces in the dispersal of protests. A formal investigation into such instances should be launched, and perpetrators should be held accountable.
- Recourse for judicial review and effective remedy should be provided including compensation in cases of unlawful denial of the right to peaceful assembly by state authorities.

6.5 Regarding access to UN Special Procedures mandate holders

- The Government should extend a standing invitation to all UN Special Procedure mandate holders and prioritize official visits by: 1) Special Rapporteur on Human Rights Defenders; 2) Special Rapporteur on Freedom of Expression; 3) Special Rapporteur on Freedom of Peaceful Assembly and Association; 4) Special Rapporteur on the Independence of Judges and Lawyers; 5) Special Rapporteur on Extrajudicial, Summary or Arbitrary Executions.

6.6 Regarding State engagement with civil society

- Implement transparent and inclusive mechanisms of public consultations with CSOs on all issues mentioned above and enable more effective involvement of civil society in the preparation of law and policy.
- Include CSOs in the UPR process before finalizing and submitting the national report.
- Systematically consult with HRDs and CSOs on the implementation of the UPR including by holding periodical comprehensive consultations with a diverse range of civil society actors.
- Incorporate the results of this UPR into a national action plan for the promotion and protection of all human rights, taking into account the proposals of civil society and present a midterm evaluation report to the UNHRC on the implementation of the recommendations of this session.
